That great edifice is now nearing completion, and before Congress clos its next session the bills for the estal ent of the street railway lines over the plaza may be expected to pass and tuation by the middle of next summer will shape up for the future of that important part of the city. Several dealers interested in property along F street, G street, and Massachusetts avenue, are on the alert for what may develop there within the next year or so. They are in a sanguine frame of mind regarding values in that quarter, and express their belief that there will be a big rise in prices. One man talked with sees great improvements to take place in F street He declared that was the natural outlet of traffic from the front of the station to the uptown section. He expects to see F street the scene of big hotels, restaurants, and large apartment houses within the next three years, He stated that there had been many inquiries about property there within the past few months, and there within the past few months, and that he expected definite propositions would soon be made to acquire holdings in that quarter for the large buildings in the near future be erect.
